

Original doors from upstairs being prepared for rear entrance closet

Burying the security wiring

“J.C.” looking for squirrels

Exterior panels for entrance

1860 flooring for a bedroom

Checking on progress

I guess they're doing a good job

We need a railing for these stairs

Makes me dizzy

Insulated lower door panel

Above the pencil is an original signature from 1843

Couldn't quite make it out

New and old - entrance being assembled

Original casings ready for stripping and sanding (lead paint)

Tools of the trade – more casings await revival

A door awaits installation

Restored casing has been primed and painted, ready to install

Ready for primer and finish paint

Assembly area

Bits and pieces ready for sidelight installation after prep work

A soft spot

End grain on an old Fir board

Strip the old putty and remove the glass before prepping the sidelight

A wintry day at The Farm

Removing the putty and glass from the 1843 transom window

Dave gives up his jacket for today

Prepping door openings for casings

Casing edges must be stripped of old wallpaper and plaster and painted before installation

This door will lead to the basement

Rear entrance closet doors (1843)

A bathroom vanity arrives – Walnut facings made from trees cut down on the property

Period float glass to replace some of the front entrance panes

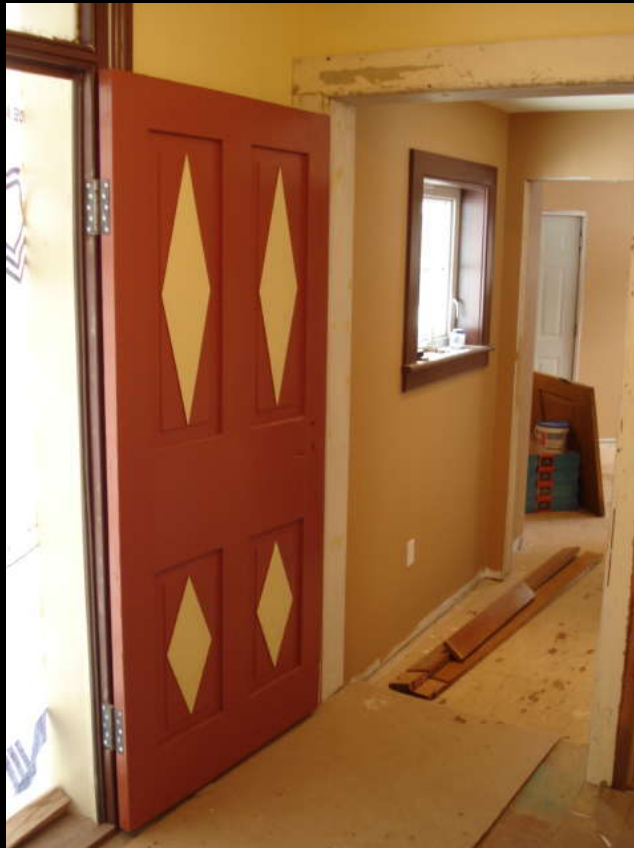

Dave provides an option for painting the entrance door (1860)

1860 casing in the Great Room

1860 entrance door – painted and ready for approval

A red tail Hawk looks for lunch

